HUSBAND AND WIFE.

After Forty Years the Widow Looks Upon the Beloved Form.

Many years ago I read a pathetic story. I do not remember all the details of the incident which so impressed me, but the chief facts were these: A married couple were crossing one of the great glaciers of the Alpine region, when a fatal accident occurred. The husband fell down one of the huge crevasses, the rope broke, and the depth of the chasm was so great that no help could be rendered. Over the wife's anguish at her loss we must draw the veil of silence. Forty years afterward saw her, with the guide who had accompanied them at the time of the accident, standing at the nearest hotel at the foot of the glacier, waiting for the sea of ice to give up its dead; for, by the well-known law of glacier progression, the form of her long-lost husband might be expected to appear, lifted from the mouth of the tor-watched and waited, and their hopes were at last rewarded.

 One day the body was released from its prison in the ice, and the wife looked again on the features of him who had been so long parted from her. But the pathos of the story lay in the fact that she was then an old woman, while the newly-rescued body was that of quite a young and robust man, so faithfully had the crystal casing preserved the jewel which it held so long. The 40 years had left no wrinkles on that marble brow. Time's withering fingers could not touch him in that tomb, and so, for a few brief moments, the aged lady saw the husband of her youth, as he was in the days when were gone forever.—C. H. Spurgeon's Autobiography.

HOW TO WIN.

In this busy world people miss many good and enjoyable things because they do not know of them, never saw, heard or read of them. Here is a lack of proper publicity and promotion, in a word, advertising. A thousand manufacturers and distributors are plugging along in an almost profitless race because they consider printer's ink an expense to be avoided on all sorts of pretenses, when it is really a judicious and profitable investment. Yes, an investment, a paying investment that earns money while you sleep. Reputation gained at the cannon's mouth may be a "bubble," as Shakespeare says, but "Reputation" in the commercial world is a nine-time winner. If a man could live a thousand years and avoid the cost of life insurance he could afford to wait for the world to come to him, but as it is, he must be brief and busy to attain success. He needs all available helps to promote his business and not the least of these is advertising. No man can make a living buying his own goods and selling them to himself. He might turn his stock over pretty rapidly, but the war and tear would quickly impoverish him. — [Interstate Grocer.

THE LAW WAS DESIGNED FOR FRAUD AND CORRUPTION.

Mr. Goebel, in his Glasgow speech, said that the fundamental reason for the passage of the present Kentucky election law was to prevent the perpetration of frauds, which were possible under the old law, because of the fact that then there was no requirement for an equal division of the election officers. The present law is held to be especially designed to overcome the deficiency. Let us see about this, says the Louisville Commercial. The appointment of these election officers was, under the old law, confined to the county judge. Section 1577, Kentucky statutes, provides that "any officer upon whom a duty is imposed under this chapter and no penalty provided for the violation thereof, who shall willfully neglect to perform such duty, or who shall willfully perform it in such a way as to hinder the objects of this law, shall be punished by a fine of $50 and imprisonment in the county jail for two months."

The law was plain and adequate, proper penalties were provided for its violation, and yet it is not of record that Mr. Goebel, or any of his party friends, ever undertook a prosecution of men on the charge of not holding to its mandates. Was the Goebel law designed to remedy this so-called deficiency? Was that the purpose of the law, as claimed by its author? Had an amendment to the old law been passed providing that in future the county judge must appoint as democratic election officers in the various precincts such qualified persons as the democratic county chairman might recommend, and such republican election officers as should be recommended by the republican county chairman, then this deficiency would have been easily overcome.

Suppose, too, that the amendment had also provided that if the county judge failed or refused to appoint such qualified persons as these two chairmen should recommend to him, he should forfeit his office, be fined not less than $1,000 and confined in the penitentiary not less than one year? Does any one doubt that this would easily and effectually have accomplished all Senator Goebel says his law aims to do?
 And does not the fact that he failed and refused to take this shorter and easier way to that end, and insisted on taking the longer and more difficult one exemplified by the Goebel law, suggest to thinking men that there was some other purpose in view than the correction of imaginary irregularities in republican counties? We say "failed and refused to take the shorter route" advisedly, for Senator William Henry Jones, of Barren county, at the same time introduced a bill to amend the election law along the line we indicate. He mentioned in his speech supporting the bill that it was similar to the Ohio election law. Then it was that Senator Goebel rose in his place, denounced the Ohio election law as an outrage, Ohio elections as a stench in the nostrils of decent people, and denounced Senator Jones' bill, which was defeated. Yet today Senator Goebel is telling the people that the law of which he is the author is in substance the same as the Ohio law. Manifestly the Goebel law has some other and ulterior purpose than to compel an equal division of precinct election officers throughout the state. What that purpose is can best be guessed by the character of the law itself and the means employed to pass and to sustain it.

LITERARY NOTES.

John Ruskin, the greatest writer of any age on questions of art, is approaching the end of his life at his home in Coniston, a helpless and senile wreck of his former grand self. For the past nine years, at long intervals, word has come from England that Ruskin has died. The latest report has it that he is not precisely mad, but that he is afflicted with the imbecility that sometimes accompanies old age. He takes no further interest in the subjects that he once loved to study and write about. The picture he presents is one of unutterable sadness, of a fine mind broken, an active body bowed, a noble character blotted out.

Harold Frederic's "Damnation of Theron Ware" has been spoken of since the author's death as only comparatively well known in this country, but it is the opinion of many who follow literary popularity in the United States that it has had, and is still having, a great run. In England, where it was published under the name "Hallelujahs," and where, by the by, it boasted a flattering preface by Mr. Gladstone, it was possibly not quite so prevalent on every literary table as here, where it had a striking vogue for some time, and still finds steady sales.

If so be there are youths, maidens or children of a large growth who have never read "Henry Esmond," and do so for the first time under the flattering auspices of the new edition now issuing in this country, congratulations are now in order. And if there are those who have not read that best of novels for a long time, and are refreshing memory under these same pleasant circumstances, they also are to be envied. For the new edition leaves nothing to be desired in the way of equipment, being solid, handsome and useful in form.

A LITERARY (?) CONVERSATION.

On Sunday I said, as I took up my hat:
 "I think I'd like a literary chat; Miss Gush, Miss Flirt—I am tired of them all."
 So on Miss Bas Bleu I think I shall call.
 If I believe the half that is said, She must be most remarkably well-read.
 I will go and get her to set me right On some questions that are troublesome, quite—
 "Did Bacon write Shakespeare, or was't Shakespeare?"
 Was Hamlet's madness feigned, as now we hear?
 And while there I will ask her to explain A passage of Browning that is not plain.
 I feared my ignorance would be shocking To such a savant as Miss Blue Stocking.
 And so I began the conversation With my only Latin—a quotation—
 "All in vain, for she understood it not. But remarked that the day was very hot.
 So, thinking I would try her once again, I asked her if she thought Hamlet insane.
 She tried to recall him—"I suppose Tell me have you read that thrilling 'Phroso?'
 That and 'The Ships That Pass in the Night' Are, both of them, just out of sight; Then I liked but can't recall the story.
 Of a girl whose Christian name was Glory. I have just read a book called 'Quo Vadis' The author's name—I can't remember what 'tis—
 To keep up with writer's names how it bores One's mind! Have you read 'The Sowers'?
 Or a sweetly, pretty book, 'In Kellers' Tent' Have forgotten the plot in consequence
 Of having read that week 'Trilby,' 'Soldiers of Fortune,' 'Carleane,' 'Hugh Wynne,' Breathless, she paused, I asked for fear I wouldn't get another chance—if Shakespeare
 Was a favorite of her's? 'He's out of date.'
 She said, "But Anthony Hope is first rate So the critics say—I believe it is he— His books are so mixed up with others I see!
 Next week I'll read"—I stopped her here she began, For, although I'm a very patient man, I couldn't stand another hour like the last.
 These were my thoughts as she uttered the gate I passed—
 "Only a literary catalogue is she, And imperfect at that, it seems to me."

Miss Gush or Miss Flirt I prefer to her.
 Dear girls, be well read, but not like Miss Bas Bleu.

THE THIRD KENTUCKY

Has Seen as Much Home Service as Any Volunteer Regiment.
 Is Very Anxious to Go to Cuba

Chronological Record of the Movements of the Regiment—The Boys Have Two Mascots Which Are Curiosities.

THE LEXINGTON LEADER HAS THE FOLLOWING TO SAY OF THE THIRD KENTUCKY:

"These are troops which have had hardships to contend with at the front, both at Santiago and Porto Rico, but none can lay claim to having seen more active service in this country than our own Third Kentucky. Since the day this regiment was called to go to defend the country until the present time the boys of the gallant Third have always been ready to respond to the call to go to the front. They have met with disappointment is not the fault of the men comprising the regiment. Many of them fully expected to meet their Christmas dinner in Porto Rico, and at Newport News, when the order was given to embark for foreign shores there was great rejoicing among them. Now that there is prospect of being sent to Cuba the members of this regiment are feeling more cheerful and all express themselves as pleased with the plans so far outlined."

At Camp Hamilton the Third Kentucky regiment is conveniently located. But camp life is not to the liking of the enlisted men, who are anxious to make a reputation in the war which will make all Kentuckians feel proud of them. The officers are as eager as the enlisted men to see actual service, and have left nothing undone toward having this regiment among the first ordered to Cuban shores. Whether to Havana or Santiago, they are all ready and anxious to go.

The health of the regiment is greatly improved over what it was when it arrived here, and with the recruits taken in since the Second Kentucky has been mustered out to the front with its full number of men, which is a better record than any of the volunteer regiments can show, and makes the boys feel encouraged to believe they will be among the first to leave the shores of the United States.

CHRONOLOGICAL RECORD.

Following is a chronological record of the Third Kentucky Regiment from the day it was called to arms until now:
 May 6—Called out by Governor Bradley.
 May 7—Companies started for Lexington.
 May 8—Arrived at Camp Collier at Lexington.
 May 21—Mustered into the service of the United States.
 June 1—Left Lexington for Chickamauga Park.
 June 2—Arrived at Chickamauga, being among the earliest of the volunteer regiments to reach the park.
 July 27—Marched to Rossville, Ga., to embark on the cars for Newport News, and thence to Porto Rico.
 July 29—Arrived safely at Newport News expecting to take transports next day for Porto Rico.
 August 1—Ordered to board transports for Porto Rico.
 August 1—Order countermanded and troops ordered back to camp.
 August 16—Left Newport News for Lexington.
 August 18—Arrived at Lexington at midnight.
 August 19—Arrived at Frankfort Pike Camp, on the Louisville-Southern railroad.
 August 20—A detail from the regiment, under command of Capt. Noel Gaines, ordered to do provost duty in the city of Lexington.
 September 17—Left Frankfort Pike Camp and located at Camp Hamilton.
 October 26—Pioneer detail, under Capt. Davis, sent to Columbus, Ga., to prepare camp for the regiment.

SUMMARY OF SERVICE.

In camp at Lexington, 24 days.
 En route to Chickamauga, 2 days.
 In camp at Chickamauga, 55 days.
 En route to Newport News, 2 days.
 In camp at Newport News, 17 days.
 En route to Lexington, 2 days.
 In camp at Camp Weil, 29 days.
 Now in camp at Camp Hamilton.

MASCOTS OF THE THIRD.

The Third Kentucky boasts of two mascots, "Shorty" and "Dave." One is a quadruped coon, while the other is also of the tribe sometimes very irreverently designated as "coons." "Shorty" is of the two-legged persuasion and has been with the regiment since it arrived at Chickamauga. His correct name is Rouellus M. Garner. He is 12 inches high, weighs 12 pounds and is 32 years old. He was found on Snodgrass hill at Chickamauga one afternoon when some of the Company A boys were up there hunting rabbits. After receiving an invitation to join the regiment he agreed to go along as mascot if the boys would see that he had plenty to eat. "Shorty" is one of the best poker players in the army, and sends home each month a neat sum. Since joining the regiment he has received numbers of offers to go into minstrelsy, but he has declined and says when "the war is over" he intends to locate in Henderson, Ky., and open a boot-blacking establishment. He is now at home on a "hot-foot" far enough and writes that he will be back on Tuesday.
 As to "Dave," the other coon, well, he is the fattest, most playful bought by Sergeant Cramer, of company L, when he was so small, but he had to be fed out of a bottle, and now he is very tame and doesn't any more. He spends most of his time chained to a stake in front of the row of tents belonging to the band. Every day or so some of the boys take him down to the creek and let him hunt for crawfish. His playmate is "Uno," a little yellow cat. They are very fond of each other and roll around and around, having a good time generally.

 An enterprising young citizen was out to camp Saturday and took "Dave's" picture. He seemed to be delighted and put his head on one side, looking very comical. "Dave" is always glad to receive visitors, especially if they bring along any candy or tulu.

A TIGER RELIC.

Amusing Instance of Manner in Which Museum Are Impressed Upon the Memory of the People.
 A tiger relic is now on display upon the just come to light. At the Tropic of Cancer, when the Catholic of St. Denis was captured, the figures which were placed in the beautiful gothic tomb of St. Denis were thrown down, and for the most part destroyed, all that remained being the body of his Queen, and the head of his son, who were the rest of the relic. When the rest of the relic was subsequently they made the best they could of the bits, putting the son's head on the mother's body and calling it the Reine-Napoleon. Not long ago more intelligent restorers put an end to this absurdity, and there are now to be seen at St. Denis two statues on which the original portions of each are preserved. But meanwhile the bits of the relic are in the collection of the Beaux Arts in Paris and in the National Museum at Washington. As examples of the manner in which the relic is treated, that is to say, in the Gothic art. But this is to tell. In the Tropic of Cancer, there is a small statuette of stone, with various cracks and flaws which give it an antique appearance, which is nothing less than a smaller and very imperfectly made copy of the relic. The relic felt the difficulty which might be raised to placing a man's head above a woman's bust, and so has modified both to a small extent; but there is not a shadow of doubt that he has succeeded in placing it in a most unexpected position where he could fit the exact fit.—St. James' Gazette.
